1. POLICY

South Africa is a multilingual country in which 11 languages are constitutionally protected. The unique history of our country, coupled with the international experience in multi-lingual countries, make it imperative that African languages should receive ongoing attention at schools and in other spheres of social and economic activity.

However, as English is the language most commonly used in official and commercial life in South Africa and as it is a language associated with economic and social mobility, it enables improved access to the country's economic resources and increases the ability of the individual to participate meaningfully in the economy. It is for this reason that English has been chosen as the primary medium of instruction at the Cape Town College of Fashion Design.
